a life-threatening, but highly treatable congenital heart defect. That's over 1.3 million children each year. 93% are born in a country that cannot provide them with treatment.

“The need is there and we are continually scaling our operations to meet that need,” says Raylman.

A Global Network

GOLI's mission is to provide lifesaving cardiac treatment to children in need from developing countries regardless of gender, creed, or national origin. Their goal is to develop sustainable pediatric cardiac programs by implementing screening, surgical and training visits which are supported by autonomous Gift of Life programs, Rotary global grants and generous donors from around the world.

This global network is currently providing lifesaving cardiac treatment to a child every two hours and 18 minutes. Over the past forty-six years, Gift of Life International has helped more than 44,000 children from 80 countries across 5 continents receive treatment for their heart disease. This global network of caring comprises 84 Gift of Life Affiliated Programs throughout the world. Through their collaborative efforts, they are lighting the world with hope for children with heart disease and their families.

A Telethon of Good News

Now more than ever, the world needs some good news. Here are just a few of the stories that will be shared during the Global Hearts telethon on Thursday, November 29:

Grace Agwaru, the very first Gift of Life International heart surgery recipient was treated on Long Island nearly 50 years ago. In September of this year, she returned from Uganda to Long Island to thank the volunteers who have since gone on to save thousands of other children worldwide.

As CBS2's Carolyn Gusoff reported in this coverage on September 27, the little girl is now a grown woman on a mission to give back. "Today our daughter has come home," said Rob Donno, Gift of Life founder. There is an unbreakable bond between Grace Agwaru and Donno. When she was just 5, a child in Uganda with a hole in her heart, he was a stranger who saved her life.

Tendo, who lives in Uganda, was only 9 months old when Gift of Life International treated her. Now she's a 12-year old who wants to become a cardiologist.

Organizers are hoping to visit a family in Kosova to interview the father of Rea, Gift of Life's 40,000th child. CEO Rob Raylman will interview Paulina and her mom, a child from the Ukraine. He will also interview health care providers in various locations to talk about the impact Gift of Life has had on them personally.
